VISITING UNIVERSITY STUDENTS GIVE BACK TO WILUNA

In October 2008, five students studying community development at Murdoch and Journalism at Edith Cowan Universities visited Wiluna. The student's project involved developing a community profile for future students, visiting agencies and new staff to gain some insight into the community of Wiluna. The students visited the local School, Shire, AMS and Police. A highlight for the students was visiting and talking to local Elders from the Kutkabubba Aboriginal Community. The students learnt about the importance of community and believed that it was vital for all new people to take time to learn about the community's way of life and the culture of the Mardu Language Group. Now that the students have completed the profile of Wiluna, the project officer will be coming back to town to visit the community to get feedback about what the students wrote. The community profile will then be passed onto the interested agencies to use for future reference. The Combined Universities Centre for Rural Health would like to thank the community of Wiluna for their support and kindness during the students visit.

Canning Stock Route Celebration

Celebration of Wiluna's artists at Tjukurba Gallery: Telling Our Stories Through Painting: The Canning Stock Route Project

The talent of Wiluna's established and emerging artists will feature in an exhibition: Telling Our Stories through Painting: the Canning Stock Route Project, which opens at Tjukurba Gallery on Friday, 7 November 2008.

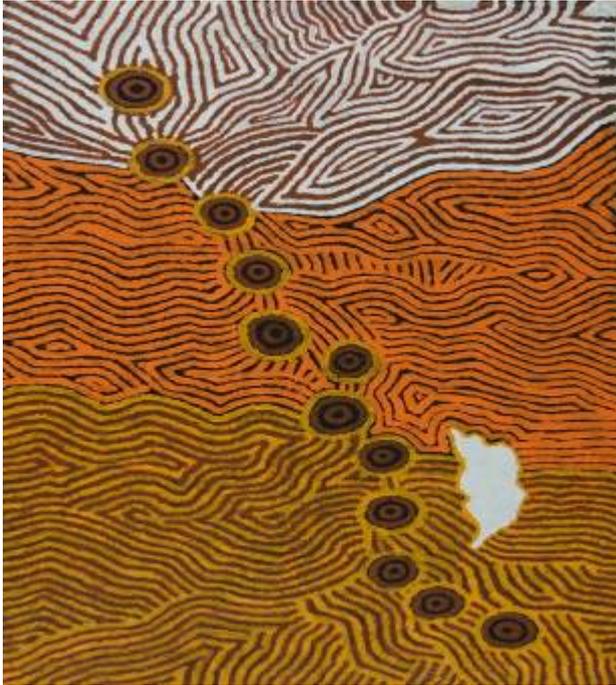

Some of the artists displaying work are taking part in a collaborative enterprise – known as The Canning Stock Route Project – among nine remote Aboriginal art centres and communities from the Kimberley, Midwest and Goldfields regions of Western Australia. Tjukurba Gallery is one of the art centres participating in the project.

Since 2007, artists, countrymen and custodians from these communities have been creating an unprecedented body of work which tells, for the first time, the story of the Stock Route and its impact as seen through Aboriginal eyes. This will be distilled into a major exhibition, due for launch at the National Museum of Australia in Canberra in mid 2010.

Telling Our Stories Through Painting brings together some important pieces by Wiluna artists, destined for the Canberra exhibition, and shows them alongside work by the community's emerging artists. It creates a moment which celebrates the strength and energy of Wiluna's artistic development: where it is possible to plot the trajectory from the freshness of emerging generations through to the potent work of the community's leading artists.

The exhibition opening will launch a weekend of celebration, involving the school, the Shire and the whole community in celebrating Wiluna and highlighting in particular the connections between community, corporate and Indigenous stakeholders.

A whole range of activities for 'kids of all ages' are in prospect, including a BBQ and a film night. Plans include a multimedia and history evening featuring films and photography from The Canning Stock Route Project and the showing of locally-sourced material. The film night will wrap up with music from a local band. See below for details.

Telling Our Stories Through Painting is designed and delivered by FORM, in partnership with the Shire of Wiluna. The show has been made possible through the support of BHP Billiton Nickel West, the Government of Western Australia's Department of Local Government and Regional Development (via WARIS).
